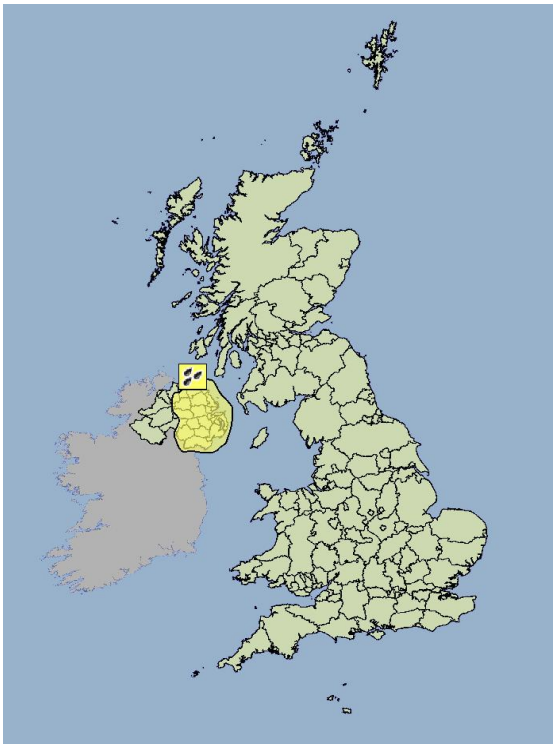
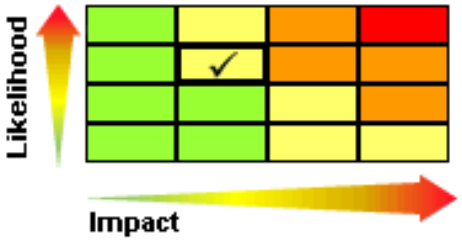
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of heavy rain is expected to move north into Northern Ireland early on Monday, persisting for much of the day and lasting into the early part of Tuesday. 10-15 mm of rain is likely widely, with locally 25-40 mm possible in the east.

In addition, several cms of snow could accumulate over the highest routes. It is possible that some wet snow may fall to lower levels for a time on Monday morning, although it is unlikely to accumulate.
Some western parts of Northern Ireland have been removed from the warning. In addition the expected rainfall totals have been reduced and therefore low impacts are now expected.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain
